Of course we all read the nonsense printed by the Eastern papers on the subject of Sarah Bernhadt's phyical insufficiency, but very few people realize how prefernaturally thin she is, for all that. The following perfectly true incident will convey an approximate idea, however, especially to country leaders! to sell her a machine which would prevent burglars from getting into the house. She bought three. Those placed at the front and back doors were so arranged that when the door was opened a hammer would strike down from above and knock down the person trying to enter. A third contrivance, of different pattern, was placed on the stairs, and another at the front window. Gallagher unexpectedly returned late that night, and attempting to enter the front door, got a blow on the nese that knocked him down the steps into the streets. He was both surprised and annoyed at the circumstance, and utterly mable to understand it, tried the door again. Same result. He then thought some-body was behind the door trying to assessinate him, and getting up very mad, ran around to the back door to get in that way. There he got a thomp that sent him backward into the swill-barrel, and he was terribly cross when he got up. He grabbed an ax, and as he opened the door again, struck with it. But he hit nobody, and got another knock-down. Then he went and got a policeman, so that one could tackle each door, and one be sure to get in; but after both had enjoyed three knock-downs they met and compared notes, and decided that two men must be in the house. They then tried the front window, and, raising it, time Mrs. G., upstairs heard them, verses, and again the wedding was and nearly died of fright.
